NRO CIO Jill Tummler Singer Honored with the 2012 CloudNOW Top Ten Women in Cloud Award

The National Reconnaissance Office (NRO) Chief Information Officer, Jill Tummler Singer, was one of 10 winners of the first annual CloudNOW award presented at the Cloud Connect Conference today. CloudNOW, a nonprofit executive consortium of leading women in cloud computing, selected the winners through a process of industry nominations and applications with final selection based on outstanding contributions to the cloud.

Considered one of the top women leaders in Federal IT, Ms. Singer was recognized for her innovative and inspirational leadership in the area of Cloud Computing. She is known not only for her presentations and writings on technologies and business changes needed for technological success, but her ability to mentor and grow the next generation of IT leaders to deliver long-term, sustained success.

Ms. Singer said upon receiving the award, “I am deeply honored to be recognized by CloudNOW with this leadership award. Having been in the IT field for many years, I believe the cloud computing chapter in the industry is an exciting one and I am proud to be a part of it.”

The NRO is a joint Department of Defense-Intelligence Community organization responsible for developing, launching, and operating America’s signals, imagery, and communications satellites to meet the needs of our nation.
